Then he came to the disciples and found them sleeping. (Luke 26:40).

This is one of the disciples' lowest points. Jesus is pleading for his life, literally sweating blood, and his followers who have vowed to stay with him until the bitter end are sacked out cold. The older I get, though, the more I see how that's possible. They're tired and tired people need sleep. It's eleven o'clock on a Sunday night and I'm tired, too. I'm not sleeping now, though. I'm writing this news-letter article that was due six days ago. I'm working on this doctorate that never seems to end. I got myself on this presbytery restructuring committee that's about to kill me. I taxi my children all over town for music lessons and soccer practice... It's a fast paced world. So if it's late, I see how Jesus' disciples might have passed out.

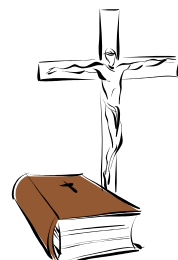

It's easy to look back at our ancestors and wonder why they didn't do more. I wonder, for example, when my ancestors saw that their fellow human beings were being sold like cattle into slavery, why they didn't do anything. I imagine that they were doing the same thing I'm doing. When the roll is called up yonder and God asks me why I didn't do anything about the millions of Syrian refugees who were dying of hunger, or about immigrant families being ripped apart while I enjoyed the fruits of their cheap labor... I wonder if my answers will suffice. "I had to lead a Bible study on Hosea," I'll respond, or "those sermons came around every week back then," or "I had children and children need attention..." I wonder if that will suffice. Or if it won't be something more like, "Then Jesus came to Luke and found him sleeping." I wonder.

I don't pretend to have all the answers. We're all busy with good things. God doesn't need us to bring in the Kingdom, after all. The Resurrection happens despite our best efforts to stop it. The world's hope is not that we Christians finally get our act together. The world's hope is that Jesus is Lord. That's true whether we pay attention or not.

But the issues of the day demand that we do something, or at the very least say something. We know, after all, that every one of those Syrian refugees is a beloved child of God Almighty. And we know that in God's eyes, people can never be illegal. They may do something illegally, but they themselves are not illegal. That's an important distinction. They are God's very own children, just as much as we are. We do something, after all, not to change the world, much less save it. We do something because God in Christ already has.

So go do what you have to do. I get it. And get your eight hours of sleep. I get that, too. But don't get caught sleeping on life's most important matters. Sometimes those important matters are mundane activities like driving children to music lessons or studying Hosea. But sometimes, they get us out in the issues of the day, where the rubber meets the road, where people are hurting, where injustice seems to reign supreme. We know better. Only Jesus reigns. Go live and do accordingly.

— Luke

THE BEGINNING OF THE CONVERSATION

"We've tried all these years to scapegoat Judas, tried to point the finger at somebody else. But if we fail to recognize Judas dwelling also in ourselves, we have missed the point of the gospel. If we do not acknowledge Judas as our brother, we miss the essence of redemption. And if we continue to silence the voice of Judas, we lose two things — first, we lose something of our humanity; and second, we lose the profound experience of God's love. For as someone has put it, "Judas is not the original betrayer; Judas is not the primal betrayer; Judas is only the typical betrayer."

In the chapel at Austin Seminary, which is a beautiful gothic jewel of a place, a kind of cathedral in miniature, there's a wall that separates the nave (or the sanctuary, as we sometimes call it) from the narthex. And across that wall, just above the doors that take you out of the nave and through the narthex to the outside, are carvings of the shields of all the disciples — twelve of them, disciples who became apostles. I can look at those shields now and identify who they stand for. There's Peter and Andrew and James and John and Phillip and Bartholomew and Thomas and Matthew and James the son of Alphaeus and Thaddeus and Simon the Canaanite...and then there's Matthias. He was the one who was added later, to replace you-know-who.

If I had just a little bit more courage than in fact I have, I would design a shield for Judas too, and put it up there with all the rest. It might disturb the symmetry of things, but I think he belongs up there. St. Judas. Conflicted and dysfunctional and wrong as he no doubt was, he was no more imperfect than anybody else on that wall.

After all, he's not the one who died for us. Jesus is. And across these may centuries, just like he promised, Jesus still waits to meet us — waits to meet all of us, even Judas — at the world's most welcoming table."

AKILAH'S YAV ADVENTURE

Hair

I love my hair. I really, really, really do! At home, there are so many people with similar hair, but my hair is unique to me. I'd like to believe that I am not vain, but no one else has my coloring. No one else has my curl pattern. People tend to comment that I look like my mom in my normal hair-style and I do love those comments. I love my hair. But, my hair has brought up some unique experiences since I've been in the Philippines. By the way, did I mention that I love my hair?

To an outsider, the Philippines seems to be a pretty homogenous place compared to the United States, which means almost everyone has the same facial structure, general physique, and – you guessed it – hair type! So, when I come along, and visit places or meet people that don't see many foreigners (especially African-Americans) I, honestly, tend to be slightly violated. Let me explain...

In America, we know that there are different types of hair textures. Not everyone realizes that, here in the Philippines. The mildest question I've gotten is "Is it a wig?" I can answer that, easily – No, it is not a wig. I guess that's a fair question. I wonder if I said, "None of anyone's business," but really questions are ok and I am not that rude. Moving beyond the "asking questions" is where the problem lies.

In America, we (should) know that you need to ask before touching someone's hair. It can be very rude to just walk up to someone and play with his or her hair. In some of the places I've been, that isn't a well-known concept. In Bohol, during my third week in the Philippines, my fellow YAVs and I toured a local elementary school. The children spent the entire time trying to be sneaky and touch my hair, as if I wouldn't notice it (they ran away when I actually offered to let them touch it...). But, they were children, they didn't know better, so I didn't think too much of it. But what really offended me, was that one Sunday, the pastor (and our host) started playing with my hair...in the middle of her sermon! The children, I can understand, but a grown woman, who is in the middle of a sermon, and did not ask permission, just decided she wanted play with my hair—really? I simply wasn't fine with that, but I let it go, to give people the benefit of the doubt, especially since we were in a very rural area where they don't see many foreigners. My dad told me about his similar experiences in China— well not his hair since he normally wears it bald, but how people grope, take pictures, and stare. However, now I truly understand.

And finally, in America, and hopefully everywhere else, we know that it is extremely rude to pull someone's hair, even if you are a child. It hurts! If you've had your hair pulled, you know that it hurts. Apparently, that didn't matter to these children. I was sitting with a friend eating dinner and a few of the street children walk past our table and I feel a tug at my hair. I turn around and there are at least 6 children behind me. One of them asked if it was a wig, so I give my usual answer, "No!" My real problem begins when they continue to pull my hair, not tug – pull. When I finally was able to get them to stop and leave, I thought it was over. Except, every time they walked past me that night, they pulled my hair and not my fellow YAV's hair. That was probably one of the most infuriating things I've had to deal with since arriving in the Philippines.

Like I've said, I love, love, love my hair. Unfortunately, it has brought me many experiences that I could've done without. However, I've had the experiences, I've had multiple opportunities to practice patience, learn empathy, and extend forgiveness, and I'm (hopefully) a better person because of those experiences. But, I'm also TOTALLY fine with forgoing any future hair-violating experiences, regardless of one's age.

What's Happening In Sunday School?

A STUDY ABOUT THE REFORMATION – YOU'RE INVITED

The New Covenant Sunday School Class will be learning about the Reformation in a 6-week study beginning April 23 and concluding May 28 from 9:15-10:15 in Room 10.

Why should I care about the Reformation? The reformation is a fascinating period of history and the questions raised by Martin Luther and other reformers remain critical for the church today. We continue to struggle with many issues including grace, good works, the role of scripture and the relationship between church and state.

Please join us as we look at the last 500 years of reform and dissension and explore what brings us together and still divides us.

Central Steele Creek Presbyterian Church Scholarship

(In Memory of Marion Blackwelder )

Applications are available in the Church Office for this year's scholarship. Any church member (church membership required) attending an institution of higher learning in 2017-2018 is encouraged to submit an application. This scholarship is awarded on an annual basis, so past recipients and other sophomores, etc. must reapply this year.

For the benefit of the new members, Marion Blackwelder was the daughter of Charles and Sarah Blackwelder and niece of Jack and Mae Austin. She was a student at Brevard College and died in an automobile accident in December 1979. The Central Steele Creek Scholarship Fund was started in 1984 as a tribute to her memory. The awards are made yearly and only the interest is used to finance the awards with the principal being untouched. Additional donations are gratefully accepted as the cost of college keeps rising.

Pete and Gertrude Gallant Memorial Scholarship

This scholarship was established in 2014 in memory of Pete ( Thomas Pringle ) and Trudy ( Gertrude Herman ) Gallant. The Gallants were long time members of our church and their daughter Carol Gallant has funded the scholarship in their honor. The scholarship is given to the recipient for four consecutive years provided that the student maintains acceptable grades in their field of study.

Applications for both scholarships are available in the church office. Deadline for submitting applications is May 5, 2017. This year's recipients will be announced on Graduate Sunday. If you have any questions, please contact Mike Brown.

PRESCHOOL NEWS

In April, we will celebrate the death and resurrection of Christ Jesus! This means that we, as believers, get to celebrate Jesus' victory over death. We get to lay down all those things that separate us from our Heavenly Father, receive forgiveness, and have complete confidence that Christ paid our debt! I am so thankful that we have the opportunity to share this message with our little ones as well as each other. I've not met a person yet that did not need our Savior!

On a personal note, I would like to let you know that my family will be relocating to Greenville, SC at the end of the school year. This is quite a big change for us but we are very excited! I have treasured my time at this preschool and have always felt like this was exactly where God wanted me! The board has approved JoAnna Harrigan to be your next preschool director. She is not only an amazing teacher, she is an amazing person that loves and trusts the Lord! She has always stepped up and gone above and beyond. She continues to look for ways to improve the classroom and bring a love of learning to these children. I am so excited for her and know that you will support her and love her as you have me!

Thank you for the privilege of serving this preschool and the love and support that came along with that! I am not sure how God is going to top this, but I know he has a great plan for us!

Love, Lisa
